Greetings,

If you are searching for a home inspector that will give you the best representation, you have found him. I am your professional -- hired by you -- to search and find defects, or areas of concern, and to help you determine the condition of the home or building.

Choosing the right inspector could mean the difference between finding hundreds or thousands of dollars in problems -- or not finding them at all. What should you look for? What types of skills or credentials are required? The inspector's skill and credentials are extremely important. A contractor with years of experience does not mean that he will be thorough in all areas of the home. The training or experience of an inspector is very important, but it still does NOT guarantee a thorough inspection. The inspector's ability to find defects is the most important criteria. No matter the experience or the training, the inspector must be able to find the defects. I suggest to you that the best way to determine the right inspector is by trust. Trust me to represent you with sincere integrity and diligence and I will be the right choice.

Choosing an inspector to represent you should be as important as choosing the best interest rate for your mortgage. If you choose wisely, you can save some money. My experience and ability to represent you has been tried and tested for more than X years. I have seen and inspected more than XX homes and I am extremely keen to identifying problems or safety issues throughout the home or building. I have (list your accomplishments). Put my experience and skill to work for you. You deserve the best and the most inspection. Call me and schedule your inspection today.

Sincerely,

Matt Cottenham
